

The federal system names the heterosexual child in the definition, receives the incident as an aggregate allegation, and removes the child before protection, outcome, and accountability can be measured.

OCR/CRDC expressly covers heterosexual children and expressly requires qualifying cyberbullying to be reported, but its reporting architecture does not preserve heterosexual victim status, sexual-orientation victim counts, sexual-orientation disciplinary outcomes, or the cyber medium. The allegation enters the federal count; the heterosexual child and the digital pathway disappear.